On the 31st of October, You-Know-Who disappeared after being defeated by a young boy, Harry Potter. On halloween night, the deadly dark wizard showed up at the Potter's house and committed murder. Sadly, Harry's parents died but somehow Harry lived. Strangely, now one knows why he wanted the Potters dead or how Harry survived. Although, we do know that the long reign of terror and despair is over.

Yesterday, a massive celebration was held after the death of You-Know-Who. Around the Country, Witches and Wizards in large groups in bright and colourful robes and cloaks gathered. Unusually, people even hugged muggles as they were so overjoyed. "Celebrate for You-Know-Who is finally gone! Everybody must be celebrating this merry, merry day!" A happy witch told us on London street.

Humorously, our fantastic celebrations confused the poor muggles yesterday night. Awkwardly, they stared at the owls and it even made their news about strange owl behaviour from them. However, The owls were only sending messages and letters. At night, they even thought our sparks were shooting stars! While talking to a muggles expert, Mr Cannon he explained, Our celebrations must be secret as we don't want to reveal our secret to the muggles."

Thankfully, we can look to a future of peace now that You-Know-Who has disappeared. Although Lily and James Potter died, their son, Harry still lives and we owe him this peace as he was the boy that lived. After years to come, there will be books and newspapers about him. A quote from the Hogwarts Headmaster, Professor Dumbledore "Although You-Know-Who is gone it was upsetting that Harry's parents died and we must remember yesterday, the day of Harry Potter."
