

The Daily Prophet

The Boy Who Lived

By Katie

On the 31st October 1981, You-Know-Who was finally defeated by a very young child named Harry Potter. Two days ago on Halloween You-Know-Who arrived at the Potter's house in Godrics Hallow, and killed Lily and James Potter. It is still unknown why You-Know-who committed the murders.

Yesterday, after finding out You-Know-Who's powers had vanished, people were jumping up and down chanting "Yay You-Know-Who is finally gone!" People gathered on the streets, in colourful cloaks with joyful smiles on their face. Strangely, the wizards and witches were hugging people, even muggles! "Rejoice for You-Know-who is gone!" exclaimed a very happy wizard who was included in the very large group.

Humorously, our celebrations made the muggles very confused! All day and night, the silly muggles reported unusual owl behaviour however all the owls were trying to do was sending messages! "We thought it was hilarious watching those confused faces!" mentioned Professor McGonagall.

Thankfully, there is now peace in the real and wizarding world because You-Know-Who is finally gone for good thanks to Harry Potter who is now named The Boy Who Lived. Surely there will be books written about him. "I am heartbroken that Lily and James Potter died but luckily our saviour Harry lived." Professor Dumbledore explained.

